How best to bridge divides and strengthen a common national identity?

Primordial pulls of race remain

LGBTQ and vaccine issues

Minding the local divide

In a bid to focus on the Singaporean experience, the Prime Minister announced the formation of a White Paper on Race Relations that ‘Maps Out a Shared Future’. This paper is open for public comments until 10 November.

“Maps Out a Shared Future”

NUS President Tan Eng Chye’s speech on gender and diversity

LGBTQ and vaccine issues

With some divisions like race and religion, Singaporeans have become more open to the idea of vaccines, but the idea of getting vaccinated remains a matter of concern for some. The government has rolled out a wide-reaching campaign to encourage vaccinations, but many are still hesitant.

“Maps Out a Shared Future”

NUS President Tan Eng Chye’s speech on gender and diversity

LGBTQ and vaccine issues

With some divisions like race and religion, Singaporeans have become more open to the idea of vaccines, but the idea of getting vaccinated remains a matter of concern for some. The government has rolled out a wide-reaching campaign to encourage vaccinations, but many are still hesitant.

“Maps Out a Shared Future”

NUS President Tan Eng Chye’s speech on gender and diversity

LGBTQ and vaccine issues

With some divisions like race and religion, Singaporeans have become more open to the idea of vaccines, but the idea of getting vaccinated remains a matter of concern for some. The government has rolled out a wide-reaching campaign to encourage vaccinations, but many are still hesitant.