

Seniors and poor most likely to feel uneasy about Covid-19 reopening

The poor and the elderly in Singapore were most likely to feel uneasy about the country's decision to live with Covid-19, new research from the Institute of Policy Studies (IPS) has found.

But support for vaccination remains high, with seven in 10 people agreeing that vaccines should be made compulsory for all citizens and long-term residents.