A message from South-east Asia to the US

Dealing with the region on its own merit and not through the prism of US-China rivalry.

Tommy Koh and Daljit Singh

The report calls for the US to adopt a more flexible, open and inclusive approach towards South-east Asia. It observes that the US has a strategic interest in the region, which is undergoing significant changes. The report highlights that the US should work with South-east Asian countries to build a stable and prosperous region. It also recommends that the US should engage more with the region to build mutual trust and understanding.

The report argues that the US should not view South-east Asia as a zero-sum game between China and the US. Instead, it should work with the region to build a stable and prosperous region. The report also recommends that the US should engage more with the region to build mutual trust and understanding.

The report argues that the US should not view South-east Asia as a zero-sum game between China and the US. Instead, it should work with the region to build a stable and prosperous region. The report also recommends that the US should engage more with the region to build mutual trust and understanding.

South-east Asia is a key player in the global economy, and the US should not ignore its significance. The report emphasizes that the US should work with South-east Asia to build a stable and prosperous region. It also recommends that the US should engage more with the region to build mutual trust and understanding.